

STOP suicide

Save a life. Choose to live.

“It can feel scary to say the word suicide but if you're concerned about someone, asking directly about suicide in a compassionate way is the right thing to do”.

Ask

- Using the word suicide will not make it more likely to happen
- Research shows that speaking openly about suicide decreases the likelihood of a person acting on their feelings
- Ask simply and directly about suicide

Compassion

- Empathise and let the person know you care
- Acknowledge this is hard to speak about suicide
- Respond in a compassionate, proportionate and timely way
- Try not to make assumptions as to their feelings, or what will help

Actively listen

- Give space for them to talk
- Really listen to how they are feeling
- Stay calm, even if it is upsetting to hear their distress
- Be patient, let the person set the pace
- Allow silence, listen without judgement

Instil hope

- Help them to see that these thoughts do not last; to view their suicidal thoughts as a symptom of distress rather than an impulse to act, or 'fate'
- Challenge that their real wish is to feel better, not to die
- Ask about their reasons for living
- Encourage and empower their own responsibility for staying safe

Be alert

Some people will give no indication of intentions but we can all look out for signs:

- Talking about being a burden to others
- Giving away treasured possessions
- Suddenly very much recovered after a period of depression
- Talking about hopelessness
- Increasing use of alcohol & drugs

Staying safe – creating a safety plan

A safety plan is a tool for helping a person in crisis navigate their feelings and urges. It provides a way for them to communicate the support they may need moving forward. Scan the QR code or visit the Stay Safe website for guidance on how to create a safety plan. <https://stayingSAFE.net>
